Abstract and Collection Summary:

Community Program
May 5th
"Unite to win Reparations and Redress"

The signing of Executive Order 9066 in 1942 authorized the immediate evacuation and incarceration of over 110,000 Japanese people on the West Coast into 10 U.S. concentration camps during World War II. The gov't. treated the Japanese people as enemies and said that their imprisonment was done out of "military necessity" to prevent what authorities called "acts of sabotage". Japanese Americans have the right to collect for damages for the loss of land, businesses and livelihood. The Federal Reserve bank gave a conservative estimate of property loss at $400 million. This figure did not include losses due to injury, death, psychological trauma, or loss of income. Come to an educational program to discuss winning reparations and redress (including overturning the Supreme Court decision sanctioning the evacuation.)

The items reflect the issues, activism, and community work of Japanese and Japanese American people during WWII and the post-WWII periods, with much of the material covering wartime incarceration and the subsequent redress movement. The collection also contains community programming flyers and letters, as well as a few personal narratives. These materials were donated by local Japanese American community members and previous ASA faculty.

The collection contains reports, newspaper articles, newspapers, newsletters, event pamphlets and flyers, academic articles, and testimony transcripts.
